
The Fortifications.

YESTERDAY morning, Major Murphy, Brigade-sergeant Major Green, and Battery-sergeant Major Bennett, with a detachment of sixteen rank and file, arrived in Newcastle. Their visit is for the purpose of removing the 80-pounders on Fortification Hill, and have them ready to be lowered into the encasements, which will facilitate the work on the fortifications and assist the contractor in pushing on with his contract.—We may mention that Mr. Green is one of the few soldiers in this colony worthy the name. He has done duty in different climes; was in the Crimea, the Indian Mutiny, and other stirring scenes. He was one of the many brave fellows who served in the Royal Artillery, and belonged to that regiment for twenty-one years, from which he draws a well-deserved pension since retiring from active service.

1881, October 10th. Newcastle Morning Herald & Miners Advocate, p.2

Major Murphy, Brigade Sergeant-Major Green and Battery Sergeant Major Bennett with a detachment of men remove the 80-pounders on Fortification Hill.

The Fortifications

Yesterday morning, Major Murphy, Brigade sergeant Major Green, and Battery sergeant Major Bennett, with a detachment of sixteen rank and file, arrived in Newcastle. Their visit is for the purpose of removing the 80-pounders on Fortification Hill, and have them ready to be lowered into the encasements, which will facilitate the work on the fortifications and assist the contractor in pushing on with his contract.-We may mention that Mr. Green is one of the few soldiers in this colony worthy the name. He has done duty in different climes[crimes] ; was in the Crimea, the Indian Mutiny, and other stirring scenes. He was one of the many brave fellows who served in the Royal Artillery, and belonged to that regiment for twenty-one years, from which he draws a well-deserved pension since retiring from active service.