LETTERS

Could we just make a few points on the letter on Asian Studies from Pat Burke and other students in your last issue?

We wholeheartedly share their concern over the possible fate of History IID/IIID, History of China and Japan, and support their request for the appointment of a tenured lectureship in this area. However we would also like to point out that they have underestimated the offering of Asian Studies courses at Newcastle. Economic History III/IIDA is wholly Asian in content - and was established specifically as an Asian Studies course.

In the context of the threat to History IID/IIID, we would also like to point out that the History and Economics Departments have just agreed to a change in the prerequisites to their respective Asian Studies courses. This is intended to make it easier for students to pursue an interest in Asian Studies within the structure of the Arts degree, the benefits of which move will be much reduced by the loss of an important History unit.

OBITUARY

Charles Bentley, November 9, 1921 - July 9, 1986.

The death occurred on July 9, of Charles Bentley, a former citizen of Newcastle and Secretary of the Workers' Educational Association in this city, who played an active role during the 1950s in the struggle for a university.

Charles Bentley was educated at Newcastle Boys' High School in the 1930s. During the war he was a radar mechanic in the RAAF. After the war he became interested in adult education in the region, and served on the Council of the Workers Educational Association.

The Newcastle University Establishment Group was formed in 1950 to continue the struggle for a University or University College in the Hunter Valley. Charles Bentley joined the Executive of the NUEG, whose secretary was W. H. C Eddy and joined in the public debate and private representations entailed in the campaign for an "academic" university, as distinct from the College of the University of Technology set up in December 1951.

Following the establishment of an Arts Division in the University College, the form of agitation changed. Charles Bentley was Secretary of the Lord Mayor's Committee for the Establishment of an Autonomous University of Newcastle from 1958 to 1963.

Charles Bentley was a lifelong supporter of liberal adult education and of the important role which voluntary organisations should play in adult education. He was not a university graduate, but in 1974 the University of Sydney awarded him an Honorary Master of Arts degree in recognition of his work for adult education. He was awarded the Medal of the Order of Australia in 1982.

From 1965 until 1981 he was General Secretary of the Workers Educational Association of New South Wales, moving to Sydney to take up this post. From 1981 until his death he was Administrative Officer of the Centre for Continuing Education at the University of Sydney.

At his cremation on July 11, memorial addresses were given by Sir Hermann Black, Chancellor of the University of Sydney and George Shipp, General Secretary of the WEA of NSW.

It is likely that Charles Bentley's papers relating to the establishment of an autonomous University of Newcastle will be lodged in the Archives section of the Auchmuty Library.

Charles Bentley had a strong belief in the vital importance in liberal or general education, in humanist education, and in a democratic society. He was, and remains, a member of an "invisible college" of those committed to the "great tradition" in liberal education.

Outside Work Dilemma

A recent article in The Newcastle Herald highlights some of the difficulties for academics attempting to participate in the world of commerce and industry. As is well-known within the University, conditions of employment allow for work of a higher consultative nature and it is permissible for academic staff to keep additional earnings equivalent to 25 per cent of their University salary. From the University's point of view this experience can contribute to the quality of both academic teaching and research by keeping them in touch with the real problems and activities of the professional group with which their work is associated.

On the other hand, people in full-time professional work may feel economically threatened by the activities of University staff engaging in the same work on a part-time basis.

From both sides, two critical ingredients in the resolution of this problem appear to be, firstly, the actual amount of time which an academic gives to outside activities which are income earning and secondly, the level of expertise being contributed as judged by other members of the profession.

A further factor is clearly the extent to which the activity is seen as being motivated by financial gain rather than a desire to gain or contribute new knowledge relevant to professional practice. In certain professions, of course, earnings in private practice can considerably exceed academic salaries.

In a case referred to by the Herald article, the relevant professional association had written to a company with which University academic staff were associated and it was reported that the academic staff concerned would be resigning.

The Vice-Chancellor was reported as saying that he was generally satisfied with the way the University's policy on outside work operated, although he did reject some outside work applications.

For those staff who have worked in Canada or the United States, complaints of their doing a few hours work a week for financial reward must seem rather strange, since in many North American universities faculty members are under pressure to contribute significantly to faculty income from their private practices.

Dr Mark Everett is visiting the Department of Mathematics, Statistics and Computer Science for two months from the Technical University in Darmstadt, West Germany.

Dr Everett obtained his first degree from Monash University in 1981 and was a postgraduate student under Professor Keedy.

Following Professor Keedy's appointment to the Technical University in Darmstadt, Dr Everett obtained a scholarship to work with him in Germany. He subsequently transferred his registration for a doctoral degree from Monash to the Technical University and has since obtained the degree of Doctor of Engineering. He notes that this is not a higher doctoral degree but that candidates for academic positions in German universities all do obtain the equivalent of a higher doctorate known as the Habilitation. This is based solely on publications.

Dr Everett's research is concerned with concepts for a new programming language. Many of the programming languages currently in use are perfectly adequate for small systems but are unsuitable for large-scale computer systems that are in use within industry today. The new language on which he is working is known as Liebnitz.

Dr Everett is working here with both Professor Keedy and Dr John Rosenberg on a project called Monads which is concerned with language and machine architecture.

Dr Everett reports that the undergraduate course in which he teaches at the Technical University requires a minimum eight semesters or four years but that the average completion time for students is about 12 semesters. Course content is quite specialised, concentrating almost exclusively on mathematics and electrical engineering subjects.

The prizes are named in honour of Prime Minister Ben Chifley. The prizes will also involve the award of a scroll to be signed by both the General Secretary and the President of the NSW ALP.

The ALP wishes to attract entries from as wide a range of disciplines as possible. The aim of the prizes is to encourage further study of the ALP, its history and philosophy.

It is assumed that most interest will be generated from students of History, Government, Political Science and Industrial Relations.

Conditions of entry include lodging a copy of the work with NSW ALP and agreement that the work may be published either in the ALP Journal or in pamphlet or other form.

Entries must be lodged by November 1, 1986, at the NSW Branch Office, 9th Floor, 377 Sussex Street, Sydney 2000.

Further information is available from Shane Easson (02) 264 2732 or P. O. Box K408, Haymarket, 2000.
Takashi Yokota is a Masters degree student from Tohoku University at Sendi, which is 350 km north of Tokyo. Takashi discovered the existence of Newcastle University from a 10-year old copy of our calendar in his University library.

During his 12 months in Newcastle, Takashi intends to improve his English language and to obtain a broad perspective on civil engineering in Australia. He observes that civil engineering work is largely conducted in the public sector and is influenced by prevailing political and social attitudes as well as the current economic situation. He will be interested in studying these during his stay.

After completing his masters degree, Takashi is thinking of employment in either the steel industry or in a telephone company. He mentions that the Japanese telephone system has recently been privatised and that there is currently a large-scale programme to move telephone lines underground.

The next Lunch with a Writer organised by Friends of The University will be held on Thursday, August 28 1986 at 12.15pm in the Seawitch Restaurant, The Travelodge.

Marlon Halligan nee Crothall will be the speaker. She is an early graduate of the English Department, Newcastle University.

Marion now lives in Canberra where she combines teaching with a writing career. Her short stories have appeared in several literary journals and her first novel will be published next year by Queensland University Press. She is also a cookery writer for the Canberra Times, and a critic who broadcasts on the ABC programme Books and Writing.

Tickets cost $13.50 and are now available from Arthur Warner's Bookshop or by telephoning Marie Tietze 63 2774 or Eileen Bilbie 22674.

The Royal Institute of British Architects has recently completed its fourth International, Design Competition for students of Architecture. There were 243 individual entries from 25 countries and 73 schools of architecture. Of the 17 entries from Australia, three were from Newcastle and of these, two have received special recognition. These were submitted by Fu Yin Cham and Ong King Lu, both Third Year BSc(Arch) students.

The competition was an unusual one. Unlike the previous year's subject, an art gallery, this brief sought innovative solutions to zoo architecture. Competitors were required to design a facility for marsupials and monotremes not in a conventional zoo on the grounds that concentration of many species on a single site is no longer desirable.

Mr Fu's design, based on an enclosed valley site at Jesmond, borrows forms from mammalian biology to bring together a variety of structures and spaces for the accommodation of animals and human observers.

Both projects were complimented on their success in sympathetically integrating the needs of both animals and humans.

Affirmative Action Study

The Association of Women Employees of the University of Newcastle was one of three women's groups in the universities studied by Jo O'Gaia, in her paper entitled Women Organizing in Universities, now incorporated in a significant book on affirmative action. The book is Program for Change, edited by Majelan Seue, Senior Research Fellow, Social Justice Project, Australian National University and has recently been published by Allen and Unwin.

The paper describes how women have organized in three NSW Universities - Sydney, Newcastle and New England - and considers the evolution and work of these three groups. Although Jo's paper deals with groups from three universities only, women organized themselves into groups at all six NSW universities, and in 1982 came together to exchange information and lobby with women from colleges of advanced education in the umbrella organization, Women in Tertiary Institutions (WITI). They worked with various unions in this task and were part of the push that led universities being scheduled in 1983 under the social justice directory.

In reporting her findings, Jo stresses that the active participation and organization of women in the spheres of tertiary education and unions is a potent force in the changes that have occurred, and are still occurring, in universities. To date, very little of women's contemporary participation in organizational change has been documented. It was this important historical and political task that Jo addressed.

The initial impetus for women organizing in universities stemmed from the recognition that those people in authority, almost all men, have the power to maintain the structures that so disadvantage women. In this University, we have the combined energies of the women's groups and the EEO Unit, AWEUN and others striving to bring about equality for women. We are confident that, with continued commitment, the planned strategies for change will slowly, but surely, redress the imbalance of power.

In her paper, with particular reference to Newcastle University and AWEUN, Jo made the point that in a small University with a low proportion of women staff, the support gained in working together cannot be underestimated, nor can the gains made in such an entrenched environment.

Take care with Drinking Water

Recent tests on the water taken from a number of taps in University Buildings indicate that the copper content is still below the maximum level recommended by the National Health and Medical Research Council, providing water is run to waste for a short period first.

It is recommended that the following procedure outlined in University News in April, 1979, continue to be followed:

- If the water to be used for drinking purposes has an undesirable taste, odour or colour, run the tap for a couple of minutes.
- If the water is still objectionable, proceed to another more frequently used tap to obtain your drinking water.

CHOIR PRODUCTION

At 8 pm on Tuesday, August 24 at the Newcastle City Hall, the Newcastle University Choir, accompanied by the ABC Symphony Orchestra, will perform The Creation by Joseph Haydn.

It is work of his old age, written between 1796 and 1798, after a period in England. He found life there too strenuous and realizing that he must live more quietly if he were to continue composing, he returned to Vienna. He had known hardship there in his youth, but later in the service of the Esterhazy family, he had at his disposal all the resources for music making and composition.

The two years spent in writing The Creation were a time of great joy and deep religious feeling. He said later: "Every morning I knelt and prayed to God to give me strength for my work." The wonders of creation are expressed through the massive choruses of praise and the lively and often charming duets and trios of the soloists. All creatures from the mighty tiger to the creeping worm are part of the glory of God on earth.

The choir is fortunate to have as conductor, for the third successive year, the holder of the 1986 van Otterloo Scholarship for young conductors. For a young man, Warwick Stengards has an impressive musical background. As a professional free-lance violinist, he has performed with the Melbourne Symphony Orchestra and the Victorian State Opera.

Tickets will be on sale at the door of the City Hall and at the usual agencies - Latham's Garden City, Arthur Bennet's Bookshop, McDonald Bros. Maitland, University Union, Westpac Agency and the Civic Theatre Booking Office. Prices are $10 and $6 concession.

ACEO nominations called

The Advisory Committee on Equal Opportunity is the Committee of the University which, in brief, provides the input to Council on all EEO matters and through which the EEO Unit communicates with Council. EEO activities are by now familiar to all members of the University and so need no elaboration.

The membership of the Committee includes members appointed by various organisations, such as the student associations, AWEUN and the industrial associations represented on campus. It also includes seven members of staff appointed annually by the Council on the Vice-Chancellor's nomination and in the past it has been the practice of the Committee to offer guidance to the Vice-Chancellor regarding his nominations.

The Committee is conscious of the fact that there are many members of staff who would welcome the opportunity to serve on the Committee and would therefore like to be considered for nomination.

Interested members of Staff are invited to contact Lionel Farrell, Secretary to the Committee, preferably in writing, not later than September 3.
The University of Newcastle Sports Union wishes to inform its members that amendments to federal health legislation, contained in the Health Legislation Amendment Bill 1985, prevent organisations other than those registered under that National Health Act from providing insurance relating to medical or paramedical expenses. Consequently, from July 1, 1986, the insurance policy held by the Sports Union no longer covers such areas as physiotherapy, dental treatment, prostheses, etc. Members are advised that if such cover is required, they will need to make personal arrangements for private health insurance. Full-time students should check with their parents to ascertain whether they are covered by their parents' private health insurance policy.

The insurance policy now held by the Sports Union is essentially a Death and Disability package which includes a weekly un-hospital benefit. The Sport & Recreation Department should be immediately notified on ext 344 or 334, of any serious injury suffered by a Sports Union member.

The Sports Union is in the process of formulating a plan for future development of sporting facilities on campus and submissions are invited from interested students and staff of the University.

Proposals outlining the requirements of the sport or recreational activity to be catered for should be forwarded to reach the Sport & Recreation Department no later than Monday August 15, 1986.

A Monday evening class in aerobics will operate in the Auchmuty Sports Centre main gymnasium from 5 to 6 pm, commencing Monday, September 8, 1986. This class has been arranged specially to cater for students and staff who are unable to attend the current lunch-time sessions. Accordingly your full support is sought.
